The vulnerability was found in the OS of the routers, according to Softpedia, but the company said it was only aimed at a specific type of routers. "Considering our customers' privacy and security as a top priority, we decided to not repair the routers, but to fix the vulnerabilities immediately to protect them from attacks," the company said. "Specifically, we find it ethical to fix the vulnerabilities, because it would have allowed the attackers to exploit the affected devices without using any exploits." So, we would like to congratulate the researchers of the security firm Trend Micro, for
